

SHITO-RYU

After graduating high school and serving in the military, Mabuni worked with the police department for about 10 years.

Another person who greatly influenced Mabuni was Wu Xian Hui. The Okinawans called him Go Kenki (go ken-key). Most sources say he was a Chinese tea merchant and master of White Crane Kung Fu. (According to Soke Kenzo Mabuni, Go Kenki was a barber.) His influence on Mabuni and their training lead to the development of several kata.

Mabuni originally called his style Hanko-ryu (hahn-koh roo) which means “half-hard style.” He moved to Japan in 1929 to begin teaching. Mabuni received his Renshi (ren-she – polished instructor or expert) title from the Dai Nippon Butoku Kai (die knee-pohn boo-toe-coo kai) in 1931. The DNBK was the national organization created to oversee Japanese martial arts. Also in 1931, Mabuni founded his own organization, the Dai Nihon Karate Do Kai, which was later changed to the Nihon Karate Do Kai.

Mabuni wanted to pay respect to his teachers, so the name Shito-ryu (shh-toh roo) is made up by the first characters from both Itosu and Higaonna’s last names. Ryu means style. Shito-ryu was formally registered in 1932.

When Mabuni passed away, he left the style, name and documents to his second son, Kenzo Mabuni (May 30, 1927 – June 26, 2005). Before accepting such a great responsibility, he went into seclusion for two years to train and to consider what was asked of him. Soke (so-keh – grand master) Mabuni preserved his father’s system, teaching it exactly as his father had written it down in 1929. Upon his death in 2005, Soke Mabuni left the style to his daughter Tsukasa (sue-kah-sah) Mabuni.

Kenzo Mabuni

Tsukasa Mabuni

The Shito-ryu curriculum syllabus is complete. No other martial art offers such a variety of movements or techniques.
